NEW BOOK

BYGONE SALISBURY

Bygone Salisbury is the weekly Salisbury Journal column by local historian/writer Frogg Moody.

Frogg has been providing these enchanting historical soundbites since 2016.

He now provides a selection of 60 essays complete with associated photographs.

So sit back with a cuppa and let him take you back to a bygone age...

“It has now been eight years since my first article was printed in the Salisbury Journal and as it is a weekly column, that’s a lot of articles!”

“Although each article is short, around 300 words with a photograph, I believe they give an interesting snapshot of local and social history. I have therefore decided to publish a selection from 2016/17 in book form.”

“If this proves to be successful, I will publish another selection from 2018/19 at the end of 2025.”

“I hope people will enjoy this first collection of 60 Bygone Salisbury articles.”

Come to the book launch at Salisbury Library on Saturday December 14th.

10.00 am onwards
